1. A Fantasy Action RPG – Your Story Begins Here! The elder brother of the great king of Elden, the dark god Sylvanid, vanished years ago. During his absence, the elves had suffered much after the final war. With the loss of Sylvanid, their king and hero, the elves had entered a perilous state. The world's surrounding villages and cities were taken by the power of darkness and evil forced them into perpetual shadows. Their own people turned their backs on the suffering and perished. Having lost their minds, many elves destroyed each other. Only a few survived. These are the elves known as Tarnished. One day, while wandering alone, a tattered elf wandered into a town in the darkness. These elves had no idea about the darkness or evil surrounding them and upon seeing their dark, withered bodies and their bodies covered in scars, they reacted with joy. According to the legends of the elves, this was a descendant of the elves who sacrificed themselves to save the land, but it is doubtful that it was so. After healing all of the elves, the handsome elf that appeared before her, who had their body wounded by the hands of darkness, showed his face. After offering the elf food, he asked her name. "I am Archelle, and am from the city called Elmis" replied Archelle. "I am Allan, a merchant who travels and also from Elmis. As a merchant, I had many contact with the elves and have experienced the cruel state of the elves. Don't worry, but I will help you" said Allan. "Thank you for saving me. Now, can you help me?" Archelle asked. "Of course. I'll make sure you are saved" said Allan. "That is great. I'll certainly repay you" said Archelle. After looking around the elf village, Archelle discovered that all of the elves were under the control of a dark and evil force. According to the legends, when the elves and humans had reached an agreement to form a union, and the humans had entered the elves' forest, the elves had retreated deep into the shadows. "I have to save this village." After only learning of the elf village in the darkness, Archelle

Myocardial edema following delayed revascularization of myocardial infarction: assessment with a novel four-dimensional late gadolinium enhanced MRI technique. Whether myocardial edema occurs in the subendocardium or the mid-myocardium following coronary revascularization is not known. The purpose of this study was to assess, using a novel four-dimensional (4D) late gadolinium-enhanced (LGE) MRI technique, the distribution of myocardial edema following delayed coronary revascularization. In nine pigs, three separate dogs with and without coronary collateral circulation were imaged, and nine patients with myocardial infarction and coronary stenosis underwent coronary angiography and 4D-LGE MRI (n = 2) or 4D-LGE MRI and delayed gadolinium-enhanced MRI of myocardium at risk (n = 7). In patients, myocardial edema (contractility-modified 4D-LGE MRI) was defined by myocardial thickening at the necrotic core and peri-necrotic region in the end-diastolic, mid-systolic and end-systolic phases in a region of interest (ROI) defined by automatic and manual contouring. Myocardial edema was detected in four dogs, three of which had collateral circulation. Three patients, two of whom did not have collateral circulation, showed myocardial edema, in whom the distribution of myocardial edema was similar to that in the dogs with collateral circulation. Three pigs without coronary collaterals showed no edema. Using 4D-LGE MRI, myocardial edema occurs following revascularization and is distributed throughout the myocardium. In patients with severe coronary stenosis and insufficient collateral circulation, end-diastolic and end-systolic myocardial edema is more likely than not to occur.
